CHRISTIANS AS SOJOURNERS

By Richard Cali, Headmaster

Beloved, I urge you, as foreigners and exiles, to abstain from the desires of the flesh, which war against your souls. Conduct yourselves with such honor among the Gentiles that, though they slander you as evildoers, they may see your good deeds and glorify God on the day He visits us.

I Peter 2:11-12

Anyone with discernment with regard to current events recognizes that the cultural cold war that has been fomenting over the last 50 years in America has heated up significantly in the last 5 years. Things began ramping up in 2015 with the Obergefell Supreme Court decision. The clash became pronounced in 2020 with polarization over the COVID-19 pandemic and boiled over with social and civil unrest sparked by the George Floyd riots. The divisions over the presidential election came to head with the US Capital building being stormed. Regardless of who did this or how violent it became, seizing a nation's capital has historically been considered an act of war. The cultural conflict is no longer cold.

Social media is full of the lament of people who long for the “good ol’ days” before the violence started. They imagine some “golden age” from days gone by when kids played safely outside till dark, girls were girls and boys were boys, and Democrats and Republicans could reach across the aisle to find some common ground. These things are no longer the case, if they ever were. Some Christians believe the solution is to go back, take back “our schools,” and stand for the national anthem. Their patriotism and their Christianity are blended to nearly being one in the same thing. The term “Christian nationalism” has been used to describe this syncretization of the Christian and American patriotic identities.

The reality is that Christianity is separate from our Americanism. There are no good old days; sin has always been with us. Public schools never were “our” schools. Writer, author, and speaker Rosaria Butterfield said at this summer’s 2021 ACCS conference, “Government schools are like Frankenstein’s Monster and have always been so.” She asserted that public schools have always undermined the government of the family, facilitating the nation’s slide to our current predicament. We gave over our children when it seemed safe to do so, but the monster has turned on us.

One thing is certain, hostility toward Christianity is mounting. Our morality is viewed as homophobic, sexist, misogynistic, and even racist. American Christians seem shocked that the culture and its values are antithetical to ours, when in fact it should come as no surprise. Jesus admonishes believers that we should not be surprised when the world hates us because it hated him first (John 15:18).

Redefining marriage was a huge victory for the dominant ideology, against what we believe the Bible teaches and against five to six thousand years of human history. The American cultural revolution is well under way: destabilization, disorder, down is up, up is down, language is meaningless, men are women, and women are men.

Christians in America ought to start thinking of ourselves as sojourners in a foreign land. We are more like the Israelites captive in Babylon than we are Israel in the Promised Land. What does it mean to be sojourners? How does this shift in thinking affect how we live our lives as believers, as believers who happen to live in America?

Some Christians will be like Daniel and Shadrach, Meshack, and Abednego in Babylon. They will lead, be vilified, and even be persecuted, but the majority of the “regular folk” will be like those to whom the prophet Jeremiah spoke in Jeremiah 29 when he said,

This is what the Lord Almighty, the God of Israel, says to all those I carried into exile from Jerusalem to Babylon: ‘Build houses and settle down; plant gardens and eat what they produce. Marry and have sons and daughters; find wives for your sons and give your daughters in marriage, so that they too may have sons and daughters. Increase in number there; do not decrease. Also, seek the peace and prosperity of the city to which I have carried you into exile. Pray to the Lord for it, because if it prospers, you too will prosper.’ Yes, this is what the Lord Almighty, the God of Israel, says: ‘Do not let the prophets and diviners among you deceive you. Do not listen to the dreams you encourage them to have. They are prophesying lies to you in my name. I have not sent them,’ declares the Lord.

“The reality is that Christianity is separate from our Americanism.”

Notice it is the Sovereign Lord who carried Israel into exile. While He may have used Nebuchadnezzar, the Lord takes the credit for moving them. He wanted them in that foreign country to accomplish His purposes. Most importantly, God’s marching orders to His people are to do things that are very ordinary and humble. Believers do not have to storm the capital of our nation. We do not have to publicly denounce a magistrate.

We don't even have to have a large public platform where we preach and evangelize. We settle down, work, marry, have children, and train our children up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and most of all, we pray. This is a very "grass roots" calling which God can use for change.

This is where the classical Christian movement and Geneva Classical Academy come in. Those who do not see children as a blessing do not see them as God sees them. We see children as a blessing and hope for the future. We partner with parents to train up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Parents are given the responsibility to educate their children in the faith of both the Old and New Testaments.

Parents were instructed in Deuteronomy 6:7 when it says, "And these words that I command you today shall be on your heart. You shall teach them diligently to your children and shall talk of them when you sit in your house, and when you walk by the way, and when you lie down, and when you rise up." Ephesians 6:4 specifies a Christian education for children of Christian parents when Paul writes, "Fathers, do not provoke your children to anger, but bring them up in the discipline and instruction of the Lord." This means that parents are to give their kids a Christian education; it's a command. It doesn't say exactly how to do it; it says do it. Wisdom must be exercised here.

All children should be given a firm foundation in the faith through Bible instruction, catechism, and a general education that reinforces knowledge of general revelation (the "Three R's"). Further, students trained in the liberal arts tradition will be equipped to lead. The liberal arts will help them understand worldly philosophies and the Christian history found in Western Civilization so that they may lead in confronting them. The point is that a Christian education for children of Christian parents may be even more critical while "sojourning in Babylon." Those who abdicate their children's education to the priests of secular humanism in the state schools may be disobedient if the foreign ideology is taking root.

We can teach our children to address the current philosophies and strongholds of the world that set themselves up against the Lord: secular humanism, egalitarianism, moral relativism, individualism, existentialism, and emotionalism, and to do so with gentleness and respect. We can demonstrate a deliberate faith grounded in eternal truth with outworking in love of God and neighbor. And more than that, we can demonstrate beautiful lives lived for the glory of God.

We can hope and pray that one day, God would raise up believers to be leaders, like the satrap Daniel, who will work and lead in a way that benefits all. The majority of us will live ordinary lives in a foreign land, but we do so to the glory of God. "Whether you eat or drink, whatever you do, do it to the glory of God." (I Corinthians 10:31) God uses these kinds of humble efforts.

As sojourners, every Christian in America can act as ambassadors to represent our Savior here on American turf. Philippians 3:20 informs Christians, "our citizenship is in heaven. And we eagerly await a Savior from there, the Lord Jesus Christ." Our first loyalty is to the Lord, but as such we are God's ambassadors on earth when we engage with the surrounding culture.

This is the promise: "Conduct yourselves with such honor among the Gentiles that...they may see your good deeds and glorify God..." We can be more than mere exiles or sojourners; let us be ambassadors for Christ.

In the year 2000, Sean and Dawn Fielder joined the Geneva family, enrolling their oldest child, Jonathan, into first grade. Over the past twenty-one years, three of their four children; Jonathan (class of 2012), Joseph (class of 2015), and Rebecca (class of 2017), have graduated from Geneva. This year, a new chapter in their legacy unfolds as their youngest, Savannah, graduates in May.

In addition to their children's impact on the Geneva student body, Dawn has blessed our school with her gift of teaching. In 2006, she began as a kindergarten aide and now faithfully serves as one of Geneva's K-4 teachers and the elementary visual arts teacher.

The Fielders heard about Geneva from a close friend whose children attended a classical school in Orlando. Even though they were living in Sebring at the time, Dawn made the 50 mile drive into Polk County to bring Jonathan to school every day. Eventually, they moved to Bartow so they could be closer to Geneva. This move opened the door for their involvement at our school where the Fielders made a plethora of memories.

Sean's fondest memories of his children's younger days at Geneva were the field trips. It was on these trips that he was able to spend real quality time with students, their parents, and the teachers. This provided him with the opportunity to form personal relationships. Sean so rarely missed a Geneva outing that he was given the nickname, "Mr. Fieldtrip."

Dawn's fondest memories at Geneva are the special days, such as Reading Fun Day and Roman Day. "It has always been a joy," she said, "to watch the older students interact with and lead the younger ones." In addition to the fun on campus, she also fondly recalls the "sweet memories she will forever treasure" such as the class trips to Charleston and Alabama.

Jonathan recounts that some of his best memories were Narnia week when he was in grammar school. "The building was decorated," he recalls, "and Mr. Marshall came in dressed as Aslan and read to us." He also fondly remembers Mrs. Clendinen's Government and Economics class his senior year.

He credits Geneva's teachers like Mr. Marshall and Mrs. Clendinen with encouraging him to write well, think critically, and articulate arguments. Each of these life skills coincide with his current love for learning, which he believes was ignited by the teachers at Geneva, who "truly care about the material that they were teaching."

Joseph's fondest memories at Geneva were going to the plays, especially at The Orlando Shakespeare Theatre.

After graduation, he attended massage therapy school and he is thankful for his time spent studying Latin as it equipped him with the knowledge to understand medical terminology. Much like his older brother, Joseph is also thankful for the discussion based style of teaching at Geneva, as it cultivated an ability to communicate and argue effectively.

Rebecca recounts playing sports at Geneva as some of her greatest memories. She loved being a part of a team where she could grow alongside her teammates, both in character and skill.

Rebecca, or, "Coach Becca," has since continued her athletic journey at Geneva leading our Junior Varsity girls volleyball team through an undefeated season and victory at the championship in the 2021-2022 school year.

She also added that the eleventh grade Song of the South field trip to Alabama and the trip to Washington D.C. in ninth grade hold great memories for her. Rebecca is thankful for her time at Geneva as it equipped her with the tools necessary to defend her faith.

Savanah echoes her family's fondness for Geneva field trips. She remembers them as a time where students were able to build great relationships with peers and teachers.

Building upon her mother's love for Geneva's special days, she recalls them from a student's perspective, remembering leading and encouraging the younger student body.

In addition to the special memories made at Geneva, the Fielder children were also provided with the unique opportunity to build memories in their community. When they were young, Sean started the local ministry, Faith Xtreme.

For the past decade, Geneva students have been blessed with the unique opportunity to learn from Mr. Fielder and his Faith Xtreme ministry:

Geneva has provided me many opportunities to speak to the students about the ministry. I have always found the teachers and students alike to be attentive and inquisitive during these sessions. It was my real honor to teach a class called practical ministries, in which we not only covered some of the basics of reaching at-risk kids but got to involve some of the students in ministering to residents of nursing homes.

Sean believes that God does not call the equipped, but rather equips the called.

Much like Sean's heart for ministry has had a special impact on Geneva, the tried and tested classical education model has had an impact on his ministry. The lessons taught to the elementary students at Faith Xtreme rely heavily on memorization, particularly of scripture. Once the kids reach middle school, they are encouraged to ask questions and unearth the roots of their faith. As they turn the corner into high school, they become leaders to the younger students and assist in every aspect of the ministry.

At its heart, the goal of Faith Xtreme is to be an advocate for children who live in at-risk communities. Through service and evangelism, they help these children realize God's presence, power, and purpose in their lives. Once they gain a relationship with Him, they are then given opportunities to serve Jesus by serving others.

Sean believes that God does not call the equipped, but rather equips the called. Much of what he has learned about the Faith Xtreme ministry was revealed to him along the way. Though it is a time consuming ministry, Sean has made a commitment to spend quality time with his own family first, ensuring that their needs are not neglected. He credits his wife with being integral to helping him establish this balance.

Each of the Fielder children grew up serving in the ministry alongside their parents. They seized the opportunity to form familial bonds with the children at The Refuge, thereby providing the sense of family that many of them were lacking.

Some of the students that the Fielder family has impacted for eternity are Yvena 22, Rashidi 21, Kristi 20, Jerriid 19, and Berline 17. These young adults have been in the Faith Xtreme program most of their lives and now have committed themselves to full time ministry, spreading the truth of The Gospel throughout Lakeland and Winter Haven, and reaching children who are in similar situations they were in. God is using the experienced hardships in their own lives to change the lives of others.

The impact this special family has had on Geneva and our larger community over the last 21 years is immeasurable. From serving on our board of directors to teaching and leading students, to encouraging the study of God's Word and the Christian faith together, they have made a profound impact on the school. We are eternally grateful for this family and their investment in Geneva."

Let us not become weary in doing good, for at the proper time we will reap a harvest if we do not give up." Galatians 6:9

COMMENCEMENT CLASS OF 2021

COMMENCEMENT ADDRESS

By Stratton Young

Good Evening and thank you for joining us to celebrate Geneva Classical Academy's Class of 2021. Before I address my class, I would like to reach out my sincere hand of gratitude to all our teachers who have gotten us to where we are today and helped us mature. Each one of you has been a meaningful blessing. Something Jack specifically pointed out that he loves about Geneva is its care for the students, and I totally agree. Our teachers have always been supportive, always been willing to talk, and never been unwilling to help. This has shown itself both as it relates to our academic as well as our spiritual journeys.

Mr. Jake Smith is a prime example of this. For those who do not know, I was the lone student who took Calculus with Mr. Smith this year. While we did plenty of Calculus, we also had numerous conversations, ranging from "Why is your sister so easily annoyed?" to "Which college would lead you to appreciate best the glory of God?" Multidimensional relationships like these have been ever present during our education and are so meaningful in the early years of our lives. I would like to thank all of our teachers for their dedication, compassion, and ability to teach in such an amazing manner.

Along with our teachers, I would also like to thank all the parents of the seniors for everything you have done for our class over the years. I would specifically like to thank my parents for always being there to help. Mom, thanks for being willing to make a bloodbath of my final drafts.

Though they gave me much anxiety, it looks like they helped me pull through to where I am today. Your dedication has been evident in all facets of my life, and I thank you. Dad, even though you weren't always the person to help on assignments, you sure supported me along the way.

I remember when you helped me finish a last minute, night-before science fair project. I needed a participant, and you called your friend and the Strawbridge's uncle, Timo. The study was on changes in heart rate after drinking caffeinated soda. I remember that later, when Mrs. Savant critiqued my project, she asked about a variable that I had not taken into account. "It seems this participant's heart rate was much different," she said, "but could that be because of a variable other than age, like perhaps was this person larger than average?" I think I basically said, "yeah, he was a little bigger I guess." For those of you who know Mr. Timo, you understand what a predicament I was in!

Looking back over this past decade or so is surreal. I remember the pain of those science fair projects, the late-night grab for one more page of information, and the extended history readings, courtesy of Mr. Michael Strawbridge.

It is quite incredible what we have all accomplished. I also remember all the fun we had in between our scrambles to complete assignments. Jack constantly did the tango with Mrs. Beatty, Barrett and I were involved in an accidental fire alarm pull, and someone may have teared up watching the Muppet's Christmas Carol during Mr. Rick Strawbridge's class in middle school. Whether in these past years you focused more on school (like Noelle) or more on just having a good ol' time (Barrett), I know all of you have worked very hard just to sit up here today, prepared to be declared graduates of the Class of 2021, and I congratulate you.

What is also significant and unique about this past decade is that we have been together through it all. In fact, some of you have been here at Geneva since K-4. Most students switch schools and friend groups multiple times throughout their primary and secondary education, but at Geneva we have been blessed to be one big family that has gone through it all together, which I know makes it all the more difficult to leave. I feel like everyone in this high school is my friend, and I will miss each of you.

Those of you in high school, please continue to lead the younger students well. Not only will you help those around you become better, but you will strengthen your own character as well. Rising Seniors, I would specifically like to thank you for being such supportive friends to my classmates and myself. You all have made my time at Geneva so enjoyable. Though school does get easier next year (I promise!), continue to learn and work hard. Strive to be a better you, both as an academic and as a person. Don't let the senioritis bug get to you. This year does matter. Even if it will not affect your chances of getting into that elite college, as the few years before might, it will affect your character. Continue to grow your work ethic. Also, Ian and Sophia, I hope your Investment Club endeavors result in high attendance and return on investment. If you ever need me, I'm a call away, but I am sure you will be just fine. Lastly, I would like to thank the homeschoolers who made up about seven eighths of our sports teams. Its been fun playing with you all, and I thank those of you who came tonight to support us on this special day.

Now, I would like to address my fellow seniors. We have been through so much together. Every one of you has significantly influenced my life and the lives of those around you in positive ways at this critical stage in our growth, and I thank you. Jack, when I joined in third grade, I distinctly remember how you really reached out to me and welcomed me to the class. Mr. Rick Strawbridge also noted that you helped him and other fellow Geneva teachers and students out "infinity" times over your career here. Thank you for setting that example.

Lance, thanks for always being someone I could hang with. I still haven't visited Hardee County! We need to get on that! Mr. Strawbridge's favorite memory of you and your sister was when you were new, and you wrote four pages rather than four lines. You must have really been worried about the Geneva workload when your topic explanation was longer than a typical paper! Kelsey, thanks for all the gum you have handed out over the years. Our class has probably consumed thousands of pieces of gum all thanks to your generous support!

Daniella, thanks for always being fun and sassy, which has made class much more enjoyable. Perhaps your sassiest comment was made quite early on in your Geneva career when you boldly declared to Mr. Smith that he Diversity in thought leads to fruitful discussions.

Noelle, thank you for your example of dedication and undivided perseverance. I can't say I have conformed to that standard yet, but I'm working on it! I will never forget the time you asked Mr. Fullgraf in a shocked voice, "Wait, you thought he was actually smart?" referring to me after Mr. Fullgraf was impressed with an answer that actually wasn't my own.

Andrew, thank you for your diverse perspectives that cut against the grain. Diversity in thought leads to fruitful discussions. Your contributions have helped me and hopefully others think more deeply about our beliefs.

Laurel, thank you for all your spunk. I hope you and Grace will never lose the hive mind you have recently developed, though I hope you will figure out how to communicate in some other way than high-pitched squealing. Grace, thank you for your abundant supply of essential oils that helped my classmates and me make it through the day, at least supposedly.

“needed a wife.” Well, it looks like he finally listened. And finally, Barrett. Though I’m not going to share the story now, when I asked Barrett for his favorite memory, he said it was a series of events that happened during a single, painful-in-more-ways-than-you-can-possibly-imagine cross country practice, none of which involved actual running. You can ask him about that later; his mom preferred I spare the details.

Class, your unique abilities, quirks, and passions will be greatly missed. I encourage you to be eager about the future, because so much ahead of us is really exciting. Make new friends, seek new perspectives and greater understanding, and expand your horizon. College will be a great opportunity not only to share your own beliefs, but also to hear those of the world around you. Surround yourself with people that will continue to help you grow in truth, goodness, and beauty. People that will make you more humble, compassionate, and strong. Don’t get caught up in the temptation to fit in at all costs, because you may easily become who you do not want to be. Feel free to stand out and be salt in the world!

Also, let’s prepare for spiritual battle in college. I’ve recently begun reading a book by a man named Michael Kruger called “Surviving Religion 101.” I highly recommend it. In his introduction, he writes, “belief in Christianity is not just intellectually defensible but also intellectually satisfying at the deepest of levels.” I would like to thank Geneva for clearly communicating this to my classmates and me and thus preparing us for the good fight. Whether our faith has been strengthened through a math class, a history class, a literature class, or an apologetics class, I hope we have all learned to greater appreciate the intricacy of creation and its Creator. Above all, I hope we will stand up for our faith and tell every soul the reason for the hope that is in us as we learned to do in Apologetics, whether that is through intellectual persuasion or simply by loving our neighbors well.

As a small Christian college in Birmingham, Alabama, once said: “It’s about you, but it’s about much more than you.” I believe you all should be rightfully celebrated. You have done so much. But while you celebrate your accomplishments, remember Philippians 4:13: “I can do all this through Him who gives me strength.” God has given us so much, and He intends that we use these talents to further the Kingdom. Let’s go out and be doers, but doers for more than ourselves.

If God so blesses, let’s make loads of money!, let’s marry a great spouse!, let’s raise beautiful families!, but let’s do it for more than ourselves. Life will disappoint you if you live for nothing but your own gratification. Though there will be struggles, even as Christians, we must endure, as many of the people of God have done since the beginning of time. May we be people of endurance, running the race to the finish.

Romans 8 contains some of my favorite verses. It says, “For the creation was subjected to futility, not willingly, but because of Him who subjected it in hope; because the creation itself also will be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.” What great hope we have! Seniors – let’s go out into the world with a joyful heart! Let’s do God’s will. Though this world is certainly broken, let’s do everything in longing for the future that is to be revealed.

Of course we will go through many difficulties and even failures. But, as Theodore Roosevelt once said: “It is not the critic who counts; not the man who points out how the strong man stumbles, or where the doer of deeds could have done them better. The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena, whose face is marred by dust and sweat and blood; who strives valiantly; who errs, who comes short again and again, because there is no effort without error and shortcoming; but who does actually strive to do the deeds; who knows great enthusiasms, the great devotions; who spends himself in a worthy cause; who at the best knows in the end the triumph of high achievement, and who at the worst, if he fails, at least fails while daring greatly, so that his place shall never be with those cold and timid souls who neither know victory nor defeat.” Seniors, may we go out into the world boldly and fail greatly, knowing our failures do not define us; rather, let us remember it is God’s love instead that defines us. Lets go out and serve to His glory! Thank you!
